Sunday Reflection

They rejected their own. They knew Him growing up, they knew His family, and they had Him figured out, so where did He get off teaching them in the synagogue? It would seem that very little in the world hurts as much as rejection. We humans need to be needed, and like to be liked, and there are all kinds of rejection: to be left out of things at school, not to be chosen for a team, to be told at work that someone else got the promotion.

All these experiences can shatter us and can have lasting effects. To be lonely, not to be part of anything, can be a fate worse than death itself. Christ's whole life was for others, He never worked a miracle for Himself. His first concern was always for others, especially the poor, the sinner, and those who were rejected. This rejection by His own people was really only a foreshadowing of the day when He, the God-Man, the creator of the world, the one who helped countless numbers of people, would hang on a cross. Hung on a cross with only an aging mother and one disciple to comfort Him, everyone else left Him.

It would seem that there is not a human emotion that we experience that Christ did not experience first. But Christ never gives up, never says to heck with it. Right after this setback, He sends out the twelve to do as He has done, to be extensions of Himself. Jesus kept going and doing what had to be done no matter what the cost. He kept going until the final and ultimate rejection: death on a cross, the final rejection that would lead to resurrection.

The problem that people had with Jesus can be summed up in one word: ordinariness. In spite of His wisdom and His miraculous cures, He appeared to just be ordinary. He was a local carpenter with ordinary relatives who lived in ordinary neighborhoods, how could He be the Son of God? God often speaks to us, comes to us, not through angels or thunder and lightning, but through ordinary events in our ordinary lives. St. Paul tells us today about some of his problems He does not go into much detail, only to say that he could not stand it any longer. He tells us, "I prayed urgently to the Lord, asking Him to help me, to take this thing away." And the answer was always the same: My grace is enough for you for My power is perfected in weakness. Whatever Paul's problem was, it was not removed by God but he was given the strength to bear it.
